Crossroads of Faith, Learning and Dialogue

Muslim-Christian Studies Certificate

Fourteen centuries of encounter, as well as the contemporary growth and influence of ethnically diverse Muslim communities in the U.S., make Muslim-Christian studies an important competency for today's faith leaders. The Washington Theological Consortium, the Graduate School of Islamic and Social Sciences, and the Heritage Trust jointly sponsor a program in Muslim-Christian studies.

Required Courses

- Introduction to Islam (for Christian students) or Christianity (for Muslim students)
 - Interreligious Dialogue
 - Practical issues in Muslim-Christian Collaboration
 - Elective in the tradition other than one's own
- Pastoral Placement in a Muslim or interfaith institution (optional)

The Muslim-Christian Studies Program of the Washington Theological Consortium honors the continuing work of Dr. Taha Al-Ahwani of the Graduate School of Islamic and Social Sciences, and of The Heritage Trust.
